Felicia M. L. Davis

Felicia M. L. Davis is a leader, keynote speaker, Founder of Eunoia Thinking, and the author of Autism, Not Attitude: Embracing Neurodivergence at Work and in Relationships. A charismatic leader with over 15 years of experience, from small nonprofit organizations to leading numerous teams around the world at a Fortune 500 financial firm. She has a reputation as a leader in diverse team dynamics grounded in practical experience combined with academic principles.

Felicia teaches how different ways of thinking are invaluable to success. She holds a master's degree in organizational management and a bachelor's degree in economics. Diagnosed with autism and ADHD as an adult, she learned to turn her disability into a superpower within the business world, which contributed to her sudden professional and personal success.

Focused on sharing and unlocking the power of neurodivergent minds, Davis works with businesses and individuals to improve the lives of people through real measurable value freeing up cognitive processes and boosting productivity. Beyond the stage, Felicia is a "mominator" to two boys with ADHD/autism (ASD) and is an active member of her community from serving on boards to donating over 75 units of blood+platelets with the Red Cross.

"Businesses thrive when different ways of thinking are understood, supported, and valued —not forced to fit a single mold."

—Felicia M. L. Davis

"From innovation to change management, a world without autism would be chaos."

—Felicia M. L. Davis
